

Without any commercial bias and for the benefit of the Porsche loving community.....

Thanks to a post on the forum, I learned of the name Andrew Mckenna, (www.fasterfaster.co.uk) and decided to book a day with him for some training. The reason for this post is simple. No matter how good you are, or how good you think you are, you really need to experience a day with this guy! To say he's got great ability would be an understatement and the really nice thing about him is he's not just a bloke who sits at the side of you barking orders. I found him to be an extremely good teacher, who talks to you about what you want from your time with him and then delivers it in an interesting, informative and efficient manner.

I started off the day a little inconsistent on track, reading some corners wrong and generally having to do loads of work behind the wheel to go around. Lunchtime saw me reading corners much more correctly, slicing loads of time off my laps and making much smoother unflustered progress. Basically, my workload behind the wheel was a fraction of what it had been. The end of the day saw me put several laps in, all of which were consistent and to within a couple of tenths of a second of each other.

Please don't think I consider myself to be a god behind the wheel, because I don't. Don't think I consider myself to be the world's most natural talent, because I aren't. My progress is directly attributable to this man, so I'd like to give credit where it's due and share the benefit of my experience. If you're just wanting to improve your road handling, or if you're a total track junkie, you certainly won't be disappointed with your experience!!!!
